Eerily reminiscent of the 9/11 attack on the WTC and the London 7/7 bombings, Patrick Pelloux, an EMT and employee of Charlie Hebdo magazine describes the scene near his office as being the staging area for a security exercise for dealing with simultaneous terrorist attacks on multiple sites. It would seem that at the time of the attacks many early responder resources were already tied up in the security exercise.

Comment: The 'coincidental' pairing of a 'preparedness drill' and a terrorist attack seems to have become the norm.

'Further, as with the five incredibly 'coincidental' military "drills" simulating hijacked airliners that were underway on 9/11 - at precisely the same time the actual 'hijackings' were underway - that caused all the confusion with Air Traffic Controllers, there were three similar "drills" taking place in London. These drills entailed the mock detonation of explosives at the three exact subway stations involved in the actual bombings, at exactly the times the bombs went off. It's been estimated the odds of this being a coincidence are the same odds as picking two people at random from anywhere on the planet, sending them each out to get three grains of sand, and them each picking the same grains of sand - literally trillions to one against. Needless to add, the London bombers' plastic ID cards, too, survived the explosion and were all found in pristine condition.'
